AFFAIRS of the HEART

By Mrs. Thompson

ROBBERY OF INDEPENDENCE BY WIFE'S DEBTS

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I am a man of twenty-four and married to a girl two years younger than myself. I suppose I ought to be pleased. Her mother is always buying her dresses and this winter her father bought her a fur coat. Anything she wants they buy her. So much more money is spent every month than I can earn that I don't think it is fair. I would like to see what we would do on our income, but it is hopeless. Instead of coming to me for money my wife goes to her father. Now her father has offered me a position as road salesman at a salary a good deal larger than I am earning at present. I know he would not pay any of his other salesmen so much, but would like to see his son-in-law making more money. I don't want to accept it because I prefer to be independent, but when I talk of refusing my wife won't listen to it. I know that I have a future where I am, but it is going to take time to work my way up. I don't like to appear ungrateful and make my wife think I am mean and unreasonable, but I would like to take a stand for what I believe to be right. What would you advise me to do?

TROUBLED THOMAS. Make a positive stand for what you believe to be right. It is unfair for your wife's people to insist on taking away your independence. Of course they think they are doing you a kindness, but their point of view is wrong. Make your own way in the world and even if you do not earn so much money where you are as through your father-in-law, you will have the satisfaction of knowing you deserve what you are paid. It would not be unreasonable in the least if you refused to let your wife accept so much. Such a stand, however, would only make hard feelings, and I think you will gain more in the end in the way of happiness if you overlook that part of it.
